Invitation Paragraph

Our names are Timofey Agarin, Allison McCulloch and Cera Murtagh. We are researchers at Queen's University Belfast and Brandon University, Canada and we would like to invite you to take part in our research study. Before you decide if you would like to take part we would like you to understand what the research is about and what we would be asking you to do.

Please read this information sheet at your leisure and contact us if you have any questions.

What is the study about?

The purpose of this project is to explore the relationship between power-sharing practices, such as those adopted as part of the Belfast Agreement/Good Friday Agreement, and the political inclusion of various minorities in society who are not explicitly included in the power-sharing agreement. We are interested in getting your opinion on the nature of the peace process and the use of power-sharing practices in Northern Ireland and their impact on these communities. Specifically, you will be asked to share your views on the effects of power-sharing practices on these groups, such as the use of veto rights, and on how these groups might become better engaged with and included in the political system in Northern Ireland.

What is our motivation to do this research?

Our research aims to advance knowledge and understanding of the experiences of minorities who are not explicitly included in power-sharing agreements. It seeks to benefit policymakers and those working at community level to address this issue. Through our research we hope to promote better understanding amongst stakeholders of the engagement of these groups in the political process and of the potential reforms that could further their inclusion.

What is going to come out of this?

We hope to produce a number of reports and publications based on this research, potentially including articles in peer-reviewed journals and books.
